THE ALABASTER COAST

Located on the English Channel, the Alabaster Coast corresponds to the coast of the Pays de Caux and constitutes almost the entire coastline of Seine-Maritime. Its magnificent white cliffs, its lights and its sea of jade have made the famous Alabaster Coast, a celebrity to which painters - including Claude Monet, Gustave Courbet, Eugène Delacroix - and writers - including Maupassant, Maurice Leblanc, Georges Simenon - have contributed.

Between each stretch of cliffs valleys have been formed which shelter pebble beaches at high tide, which very quickly become sandy beaches when the tide goes down and ports in the indentations. The most important are Étretat, Fécamp, Saint-Valery-en-Caux, Dieppe and the Tréport.

Extending over 120 km, between Le Havre and Tréport, and 60 to 120m above sea level, the cliffs are formed of alternating layers of flint and marl.

At high tide, the sea comes to project against the cliffs, sometimes gaining a meter a year and thus making fall the upper part which does not rest any more on nothing.

Many villages and hamlets border the Alabaster Coast, and whether in Sassetot le Mauconduit, Saint Pierre en Port or Petites Dalles, you will always be well placed to go for a walk along its beaches and at the top of its cliffs.
